PRAVDA
By Howard Brenton & David Hare

Study Guide
Prepared by Maren Robinson, dramaturg
Pravda Study Guide

Table of Contents

Page 3  Political Playwrights
Page 4  Newspaper Ownership and Editorship
Page 6  The Newspaper, Magazine and Television Holdings of Major Media Corporations
Page 9  History of the Soviet Newspaper Pravda
Page 10  A Comparison of Time Magazine and Pravda New Stories
Page 11  Margaret Thatcher and Thatcherism
Page 12  History of the Falkland Islands War
Page 15  History of the 1984 Coal Miners’ Strike
Page 17  Discussion Questions
Page 18  Bibliography
Page 19  Internet Resources
Democratic Laughter: Political Playwrights Howard Brenton and David Hare

“As a joke between ourselves, to keep our spirits up during writing, we said, ‘We’re writing this play to stop people reading newspapers.’” – Howard Brenton on writing Pravda with David Hare

“The kind of comedy we tried to write is one, we hope, of democratic laughter. The audience are invited to dissociate themselves from the tiny clique of the ruling class paraded across the stage.” – Howard Brenton on writing Pravda with David Hare

Both Howard Brenton and David Hare have, at times, been called “political playwrights.” While the phrase “political playwrights” is loaded with potential positive and negative connotations, there is no doubt that being political in their plays is something both men have never avoided. Both are members of the same generation. Brenton was born in 1942, Hare in 1947. Both began writing for fringe theaters that were interested in satire and social change. However, in 1974, Brenton said, “the fringe has failed . . . what happens is that the ‘alternative society’ gets hermetically sealed and surrounded . . . and, in the end, is strangled to death.” Independently, Hare and Brenton sought out new audiences in well-established theaters, not because they wanted to write commercial theater, but because they wanted the human subject matter of their non-elitist theater to reach a wider audience.

David Hare made a name writing satires for the fringe theater, using what he called the, “democratizing elements of public laughter.” He followed up with larger productions, Knuckle and Plenty, at the National Theatre. Hare stopped writing in the early 1980’s. He said he “felt trapped in the theater, and I went through a period of intense bitterness and self-pity.” During the early Thatcher years, Hare lived in self-imposed exile in New York until he realized that, “hating England is not a good enough reason to live in America.” Pravda, which debuted in 1985, marked Hare’s return to England.

One of Brenton’s plays led to a lawsuit. The Royal National Theatre produced Brenton’s The Romans in Britain in 1980. The play, a critique of the British presence in Northern Ireland, was set during the invasion of Britain by Julius Caesar and the Roman army. The Romans in Britain sparked public controversy because it depicted the homosexual rape of a Celt by a Roman soldier. Sir Horace Cutler, the leader of the Greater London Council, a funder of the National Theatre, walked out of the performance and threatened to withdraw the GLC grant. The Romans in Britain was front-page news. Headlines were filled with stories about the play and its potential salaciousness, and the editorials continued for many weeks.

The news caught the attention of British moral campaigner Mary Whitehouse who, although she had never actually seen the play, brought a lawsuit against director
Michael Bogdanov. Under the 1956 Sexual Offenses Act, Whitehouse sued Bogdanov on the grounds of the “procuring by a male, the commission of an act of gross indecency with another male, in a public place.” The law was designed for the prosecution of pimping and prostitution; this unique reading of the law raised the issue of whether or not a representation on stage can be considered a true “act of gross indecency.” The lawsuit was dropped when prosecuting attorney, Ian Kennedy, refused to proceed, saying, “I cannot continue to try an honorable man.” Peter Hall, the supportive director of the National Theatre, during The Romans in Britain scandal said, “Without controversial work in the repertory, we would be evading our social responsibilities.”

Plays by Howard Brenton: Bloody Poetry, The Churchill Play, The Genius, Christie in Love, Epsom Downs, The Romans in Britain, Plays for the Poor Theatre, Magnificence, Weapons of Happiness, Sleeping Policeman (with Tunde Ikoli), The Life of Galileo (translation of Bertolt Brecht), Brassneck (with David Hare)

Plays by David Hare: Plenty, Knuckle, Slag, The Secret Rapture, The Judas Kiss, Skylight, A Map of the World, Via Dolorosa (which he also performed), The State of the Nation Trilogy: Racing Demon, Murmuring Judges, Absence of War; The Blue Room, Amy’s View, Brassneck (with Howard Brenton) and Stuff Happens.

Background of the Play: Newspaper Ownership

Power and Papers: Ownership and Editorship of the News

“My chief area of concern . . . the paper’s stand on major issues. Of course it takes attitudes but I fail to find any consistency in them, anything that indicates unmistakably the clear position of conscience that a great newspaper must be seen to hold. Just what that position is, it is your duty to define, and it cannot be mine. But it must be defined with clarity and authority and even repetition.” Rupert Murdoch in a 1982 memo to The Times editor, Harold Evans

“But of course, while being consistent in our editorial position, we have deliberately opened the paper to a diversity of views in the belief that truth will triumph and that our readers, especially, want a fully informed debate rather than a monolithic line of propaganda.” –Harold Evans reply memo to Rupert Murdoch

Throughout the history of newspapers, a handful of proprietors or corporations have owned multiple newspapers. Well-known names like William Randolph Hearst, the Astors, Rupert Murdoch, Robert Maxwell and others have often been the subject of praise or criticism for their vast news holdings. When newspapers have been sold, the change in ownership and editorship was often public and painful. One of the most prominent changes in ownership shook all of Fleet Street, the British newspaper district. It was the 1981 sale of the British papers The Times and the Sunday Times to Australian Rupert Murdoch’s News Corporation. Conflicts between Fleet Street management and the printing unions over new technology resulted in a yearlong shuts down between 1978-1979. The papers ultimately conceded to the demands of the National Graphics Association, but The Times and the Sunday Times had lost money and were left vulnerable. After the sale of the newspapers, Murdoch replaced The Times editor William Rees-Mogg with Sunday Times editor Harold Evans. The battle between Murdoch and his editors was publicized in the news with the fervor of journalists covering their own kind.

Selected Events in Newspaper History

1887  William Randolph Hearst becomes Proprietor of San Francisco Examiner
1894  William Randolph Hearst buys New York Morning Journal
1915  Rothermere launches Sunday Pictorial
1916  Lord Beaverbook buys Daily Express
1918  William Randolph Hearst acquires Chicago Herald and Examiner
1922  J. J. Astor buys The Times from the Northcliffe Estate
1934  William Randolph Hearst buys Baltimore Post
1959  Roy Thomson buys the Sunday Times from Lord Kelmsley
1960  Rupert Murdoch buys Daily Mirror in Sydney
1964  Manchester Guardian moves to London
1966  Astors sell The Times to Roy Thomson, safeguards are installed to prevent his abusing editorial independence before the sale is approved.
1965  Denis Hamilton becomes Editor in Chief of The Times, William Rees-Mogg become editor of The Times and Harold Evans editor of the Sunday Times
1969  Rupert Murdoch buys News of the World and the London Sun
1970s  The Sunday Times becomes known for investigative journalism; articles on Thalidomide lead to compensation for drug victims
1973  Rupert Murdoch buys San Antonio Express and News
1974  Rupert Murdoch launches National Star
1976  Rupert Murdoch buys New York Post and New York magazine
1976  Death of Roy Thomson, owner of The Times and Sunday Times
1977  Astors sell Observer to Atlantic Richfield (ARCO)
1977  Beaverbrook (Express) Papers sold to Trafalgar House
1978  The Times and Sunday Times are closed for a year while trying to pressure the National Graphic Association (NGA) to agree to updated technologies
1979  The Times and Sunday Times reopen and concede to NGA demands
1980  The Times and Sunday Times are put up for sale by the Thomson family Rees-Mogg and Evans independently seek funding for consortia to save their papers but the consortia bids fall apart
1981  Rupert Murdoch buys The Times and Sunday Times. Rees-Mogg resigns as editor of The Times, Murdoch offers Harold Evans editorship 1981  The Wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales is given the first full-page color photograph in The Times
1982  “Son of Sam” serial killer coverage boosts New York Post circulation
1982  Harold Evans resigns as Editor of The Times two weeks after Murdoch asked him to resign; Charles Douglas-Home replaces him
1984  Public Float of Reuters
1986  Rupert Murdoch moves London titles to print at Wapping cutting costs
1986  Rupert Murdoch obtains Melbourne Herald, the paper his father built.
1987  Murdoch buys Today from Lonrho for £38 million

Who Owns The News:
The Newspaper, Magazine and Television Holdings of Major Media Corporations

News Corporation – Rupert Murdoch Holdings

Magazines
TV Guide (partial ownership)  The Weekly Standard
Maximum Golf

Newspapers
New York Post (U.S.)  The Times (U.K.)
The Sun (U.K.)  News of the World (U.K.)
The Australian (Australia)  The Daily Telegraph (Australia)
The Herald Sun (Australia)  The Adelaide Advertiser (Australia)
Gold Coast Bulletin (Australia)  Sportsman (Australia)
The Suburban (Australia)  Sunday Mail (Australia)
Sunday Tasmanian (Australia)  Sunday Territorian (Australia)
Sunday Times (Australia)  The Courier Mail (Australia)
The Mercury (Australia)  The Sunday Telegraph (Australia)
Weekly Times (Australia)  Fiji Times (Fiji)
Post Courier (Papua New Guinea)

Television Networks
FOX Broadcasting Company  FOX News Channel
FOX Kids Network  FOX Sports (partial in some markets)
The Health Network  fX
Golf Channel  TV Guide Channel (44%)
British Sky Broadcasting  STAR TV (Asia)
National Geographic’s cable channel (50%)

AOL Time Warner Holdings

Magazines
Time Magazine  Life Magazine
Fortune Magazine  Sports Illustrated
Money  People
Entertainment Weekly  In Style
Southern Living  Cooking Light
Parenting  Baby Talk
Baby on the Way  This Old House
Real Simple  Golf Magazine
Popular Science  Ski
Yachting Magazine  Travel & Leisure
Food & Wine  Departures
SkyGuide  DC Comics
MAD Magazine  The Health Publishing Group

Television Networks and Production Companies
WB Television Network  HBO
Cinemax  Time Warner Sports
CNN  CNN/fn
CNN/SI  CNN Headline News
TBS  TNT
Cartoon Network  Turner Classic Movies
Court TV (partial ownership) HBO Independent Productions
New Line Television  Turner Original Productions
Warner Brothers Television  Warner Brothers Animation
Time Warner Cable  Comedy Central (50% -- Viacom owns other 50%)

Sony

Television Networks and Production Companies
Columbia TriStar Domestic Television
Columbia TriStar International Television
Sony Pictures Family Entertainment
Telemundo Group (partial ownership)
Sony Entertainment Television (India, Latin America)
Game Show Network (jointly owned with Liberty Digital)
HBO Asia (partial ownership)
SET Asia (partial ownership)
Cinemax Asia (partial ownership)
HBO Ole, Latin America (partial ownership)
Cinemax, Latin America (partial ownership)
E! Entertainment Television, Latin America (partial ownership)
The Movie Channel, Middle East (partial ownership)
Showtime, Australia (partial ownership)
Encore, Australia (partial ownership)
Sky Cinema, Japan (partial ownership)

The Walt Disney Company Holdings

Magazines
Discover Magazine  Disney Magazine
ESPN Magazine  Talk
US Weekly (50% stake)
Daily Newspapers

- County Press (Lapeer, MI)
- Oakandle Press and Reminder (Pontiac, MI)
- Narragansett Times
- St. Louis Daily Record

Television Networks

- ABC
- The Disney Channel
- SoapNet
- ESPN (partial ownership with Hearst)
- Buena Vista Television
- Touchstone Television
- Walt Disney Television
- Walt Disney Animation
- A&E (partial ownership with Hearst and GE)
- The History Channel (partial ownership with Hearst and GE)
- Lifetime (partial ownership with Hearst)
- E! (partial ownership with Comcast, MediaOne and Liberty Media)

The Hearst Corporation Holdings

Daily Newspapers

- Albany Times Union
- Beaumont Enterprise
- Edwardsville
- Intelligencer
- Houston Chronicle
- Huron Daily Review
- Laredo Morning Times
- Midland Daily News
- Midland Reporter
- Plainview Daily Herald
- San Antonio Express News
- San Francisco Chronicle
- Seattle Post Intelligencer

Magazines

- Cosmopolitan
- Good Housekeeping
- Country Living
- House Beautiful
- Esquire
- Marie Claire
- O, The Oprah Magazine
- Popular Mechanics
- Redbook
- Seventeen
- Smart Money
- Town & Country
- Travel
- Verdana

Television Networks and Production Companies

- AETN Enterprises
- Cosmopolitan TV
- Locomotion
- NECN
- A&E (partial ownership with Disney and GE)
- ESPN (partial ownership with Disney)
- The History Channel (partial ownership with Disney and GE)
- History International (partial ownership with Disney and GE)
- Lifetime (partial ownership with Disney)
- Lifetime Movie (partial ownership with Disney and GE)
Viacom

Television Networks and Production Companies

- CBS
- MTV Network
- Nickelodeon
- TV Land
- TNN
- Showtime Networks
- The Movie Channel
- BET
- Big Ticket Television
- King World Productions
- Noggin (joint venture with Children's Television Workshop)
- SET Pay-Per-View (sporting and entertainment events)
- Comedy Central (joint venture with AOL Time Warner)
- Sundance Channel (joint venture with Robert Redford and Universal Studios)

Sources:
- http://www.newscorp.com/index2.html

Pravda in Journalism: A History of the Soviet Newspaper

“Net izvestij v «Pravde», i net pravdy v «Izvestiyax»”

Founded in 1912 as a Bolshevik revolutionary paper, Pravda, meaning truth, was the frequent target of censorship by the Tsarist police. The exiled Vladimir Lenin was among the early newspaper contributors. The language of the paper was kept simple to appeal to the working classes; articles encouraged labor strikes and provided various views on Communist political theory. After the Revolution of March 1917, the Provisional Government offered Pravda and all newspapers freedom of the press. However, by November 1917, the Bolshevik Revolution had occurred, and the same paper that had been hounded by Tsarist police was one of the few not shut down by Lenin’s Press Decree. Non-Bolshevik papers were closed or taken over, and soon all papers were publishing only articles approved by the party. Pravda editors rather than the Central Committee enforced the party line both for themselves and for other Soviet newspapers.

The fortunes of those working for Pravda followed those of the political leaders they covered. Nikolai Bukharin, the editor of Pravda under Lenin, was removed in 1929, shortly after Joseph Stalin came to power. The newspaper Bukharin had once edited ran an article condemning his errors. The government executed Bukharin in 1938, and no public recognition remains of his years of editorship.
After Stalin’s death, Pravda slowly revised its assessment of his political policies as Krushchev came to power and distanced himself from the earlier regime. Similarly, Krushchev’s name disappeared from the paper when the party shifted power to Leonid Brezhnev.

During the cold war, Pravda became famous for its unfavorable assessments of events in non-communist nations and glowing reports of its own government’s successes. Cold War Pravda’s policy sparked the classic soviet joke involving the titles of the two largest papers Pravda (truth) and Izvestia (news). “There is no Izvestia in Pravda, and there is no Pravda in Izvestia.”

A Comparison of Time Magazine and Pravda Cold War News Articles

On the opening of the border between West Germany and East Germany:

“What happened in Berlin last week was a combination of the fall of the Bastille and a New Year's Eve blowout, of revolution and celebration.”

“Yesterday evening, as soon as the GDR government’s decision was made public, many residents of the capital took advantage of the possibility that had opened up: They set off for West Berlin in their own cars or on municipal electric trains. With rare exceptions, they returned. As a rule, they answered Western correspondents’ questions by saying that they had jobs and homes in the GDR, that it was their native home.”

On U.S. President Reagan’s proposed Star Wars Missile Defense Program:

“There was some feeling, however, that Reagan’s challenge to a system of deterrence that is based on the threat of mutual destruction could be a welcome element in the debate over nuclear policy. “Reagan now suggests that we slowly start investigating whether in the next century technology may offer a solution to our security that does not rest on the prospect of mass and mutual death,” noted the Washington Post.”

“In a prompt and strong reaction, Soviet Leader Yuri Andropov personally warned: ‘Should this conception be converted into reality, this would actually open the floodgates of a runaway race of all types of strategic arms, both offensive and defensive.’”

4/29/83  Pravda Headline: Avert the Threat of Nuclear War in Space!

“I can assure you that the Soviet Union will continue to exert the maximum effort to keep the sinister plans for transferring the arms race into space from becoming reality.”
“I would like to hope that scientists and public figures of the world will also make a contribution to keeping space forever free of all weapons, preventing it from becoming a field of armed clashes, and ensuring that no threat to those living on Earth comes from space.” Yuri Andropov quoted in Pravda.

On the Soviet Invasion of Afghanistan:

1/14/1980  Time Headline: Moscow’s Bold Challenge

“Appearing for 13 minutes on nationwide television, he delivered the toughest speech of his presidency. Warned Carter: “Aggression unopposed becomes a contagious disease.” He denounced the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as “a deliberate effort by a powerful atheistic government to subjugate an independent Islamic people” and said that a “Soviet-occupied Afghanistan threatens both Iran and Pakistan and is a steppingstone to their possible control over much of the world's oil supplies.”

“Recently Western, and especially American, mass news media have been disseminating deliberately planted rumors about some sort of “interference” by the Soviet Union in the internal affairs of Afghanistan. They have gone so far as to claim that Soviet “military units” have been moved into Afghan territory.”

“It is common knowledge that relations between the Soviet Union and Afghanistan are based on a firm foundation of good neighborliness, non-interference in each other's internal affairs and equal, mutually advantageous cooperation. These relations have become considerably stronger since the April [1978] revolution, when power in Afghanistan shifted to the hands of the people, who have begun the construction of a new life.”

The Political and Historical Context:

The Iron Lady: Margaret Thatcher and Thatcherism

“I’m extraordinarily patient provided I get my own way.” – Margaret Thatcher

“The Russians are bent on world dominance, and they are rapidly acquiring the means to become the most powerful imperial nation the world has seen. . . They put guns before butter, while we put just about everything before guns.” – Margaret Thatcher, 1976

“I am in politics because of the conflict between good and evil, and I believe that in the end good will triumph.” – Margaret Thatcher

Margaret Thatcher was elected to the House of Commons in 1959. In 1961, she was promoted to the front bench as Parliamentary Secretary at the Ministry of Pensions.
and National Insurance. She stepped down when the Conservatives lost the 1964 election. When Conservative, Edward Heath, became Prime Minister in 1970, she was appointed Secretary of State for Education and Science. As Secretary, Thatcher faced controversy when she eliminated free milk in schools as part of a budget cut. The measure was highly unpopular and she was dubbed “Maggie Thatcher, milk snatcher” by The Sun.

When the Conservatives lost the next election, Thatcher became a prominent member of the Conservative Shadow Cabinet. In 1975, she challenged Heath for leadership of the party and won. As leader of the Conservatives, she became the voice of the party. After a 1976 speech on the Soviet Union, Thatcher was dubbed “the Iron Lady” in the Soviet newspaper, The Red Star. This appellation was one she relished. “The Iron Lady” would be used to describe Thatcher and her dogged approach to the many issues she would face during her 1979-1990 tenure as Prime Minister.

Margaret Thatcher was elected Prime Minister in 1979. She was the first woman to serve as Prime Minister. On April 2, 1982, Argentina invaded the Falkland Islands. Thatcher dispatched the British Navy to the islands and eleven weeks later Argentina surrendered. National outrage at the invasion and satisfaction at the successful conclusion of the war would contribute to her landslide reelection in 1983.

In 1984, the National Union of Mineworkers (NUM) started a yearlong strike. Thatcher was committed to reducing union power and stockpiled coal before the strike. Consequently, electric power was not disrupted during the strike and the miner’s were ultimately forced to return to work without having any concessions.

Thatcher’s fall from power was the result of the 1988 Community Charge, a tax levied to fund local governments. Essentially a tiered poll tax (a fixed tax on a per individual basis), it took effect in 1990. The tax was highly unpopular and the Conservative Party feared certain defeat in the next election if Thatcher remained the party’s leader. Thus, under pressure from her own party, she resigned on November 22, 1990.

Thatcherism, as the policies of the Prime Minister came to be known, was defined by: a strong but small central government, shifting control away from regional government, weakened trade unions, the promotion of private enterprise, the privatization of government owned companies, the dismantling of welfare programs and strong nationalism. She viewed her policies as an overdue correction of the Labour and Social Democratic plans that had expanded government. Thatcherism was also marked by the Prime Minister’s strong sense of ideology as the driving factor in her policy decisions. This ideology was one she shared on almost every point with American President Ronald Reagan, with whom she shared an incredibly close working relationship. The term Thatcherism is also used to refer to her autocratic style of governing.

Making Britain Great Again: The Falkland Islands War

“Who does not know that a foreign war has often put a stop to civil discords? It withdraws the attention of the public from domestic grievances.” – Samuel Johnson on the 1770 invasion of the Falkland Islands

On April 2, 1982 the Argentinean army landed on Port Stanley, the capital of the Falkland Islands. By strength of numbers, they overwhelmed the small garrison of British troops stationed there and secured their surrender. This opening event of the Falkland Islands war came as a surprise to England and to the world. Many British citizens criticized the lack of intelligence that could have warned of an impending attack by Argentina. Thatcher herself was questioned in Parliament, but when she was asked to resign replied, “No. Now is the time for strength and resolution.” Eleven weeks later the Argentineans would surrender.

The invasion was similar to one staged in 1770 while Argentina was still a Spanish Dominion. The Argentinean Governor Buccarelli landed with superior naval capabilities and the British ships retreated only to return with a vast naval power. The proximity of the islands to the coast of the Argentine coast has been one of the main reasons cited.

The reasons for the 1982 invasion were many. Argentina still viewed the Islas Malvinas, as they are called by the Argentineans, as part of their country on the basis of their proximity to the mainland and on a four-year period of settlement on the islands between 1829-1833. In the 1970’s, Argentine scientists set up a research station on one of the remote islands without British permission. The British government did not require them to leave, and many in the Argentine government read this as a sign the British were ready to “let go” of this remote part of the empire. In the 1970’s, Argentina’s rate of inflation was one of the highest in the world; the government needed the war to distract its people from the country’s financial woes. In 1979, the Shell Oil Company produced a report postulating the Falkland Islands might be as oil rich as Kuwait. The prospect of petroleum resources was only a further inducement to war. Finally, the three-man military junta (General Leopoldo Galtieri, Admiral Jorge Anaya and Air Force Brigadier General Arturo Dozo) that controlled the government underestimated the willingness of female Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to go to war.

The British Intelligence community failed to notice evidence that Argentina might invade but, likewise, the Argentineans misread the patriotic fervor that would grip the British at the threat to this small, distant and inhospitable protectorate. After the success of the Falklands War, Margaret Thatcher would ride a wave of nationalist popularity to an unprecedented majority reelection.

The media coverage during the war was complicated. The Argentine government controlled all Argentinean news outlets and ran a propaganda war in which the fabrications bordered on the absurd. Argentina exaggerated its successes and the British losses, but reached such excess that their information ultimately proved unbelievable to world observers. At one point Telam, the government press agency, reported that the Argentine military had shot down more planes than the British had actually sent to the conflict. They also falsely reported the death of Prince Andrew, who was in the RAF at serving in the Falklands and erroneously hinted that the HMS Hermes had been sunk. Cartoonists took aim at Margaret Thatcher in particular, drawing her as a vampire, pirate and a second Hitler.

In England, the press coverage was equally muddling. The government carefully censored the images coming out of the Falklands so that photographs weren’t available until weeks after the event. This caused many newspapers and television stations to rely on the coverage that was being manufactured by the Argentine government. The editorials were almost unanimously in support of the war. However, headlines in the British tabloids did not help state their case to the rest of the world. When the Belgrano was sunk The Sun ran the headline, “Gotcha.” On another occasion the headline was, “Stick it up your Junta.” The Sun also sponsored a missile on which a reporter wrote, “Up yours, Galtieri.” In spite of this less than sophisticated support, the Conservative government suggested the BBC coverage was Pro-Argentina and Anti-Britain.

Ultimately, the propaganda war did little to change the outcome of the war, perhaps because of the brevity of the conflict or because of the excessive exaggeration of the Argentine press agencies. It is, however, a recent lesson in media manipulation and war coverage.

Falkland Islands: Settlement and Conquest

1592-1594 British navigators sight the Falkland Islands
1690 British Sailors name the channel between the main islands “Falkland’s Sound” in honor of Navy Treasurer Viscount Falkland
1764 The French establish a settlement at Port Louis
1766 The British establish a settlement of about 400 people
1767 The French sell Port Louis to Spain
1770 Argentine Governor Buccarelli sends five Spanish ships to seize West Falkland
1771 The King of Spain acknowledges Buccarelli exceeded his authority and the territory is returned to England
1774 British allow Spanish Settlement
1810 Spanish release all claims on the islands
1811 All remaining settlements are British
1829 A German named Vernet is appointed Governor by Argentine government. The U.S. burned Vernet’s settlement after Vernet’s men seized three American whaling ships
1829-1833 The Argentineans maintain a settlement of approximately 100 people, most are Indians sent to work as slaves
1833 British HMS Challenger is sent to the Falklands, Lt. Smith remains as governor, British governors remain until 1982
April 2, 1982 Argentinean Military invades Port Stanley
April 3, 1982 U.N. passes resolution 502 demanding Argentine withdrawal from the Falklands
April 25, 1982 South Georgia recaptured
May 2, 1982 Argentine cruiser General Belgrano sunk by HMS Conqueror 386 sailors die
May 4, 1982 HMS Sheffield hit by Argentine Exocet missile, 20 sailors die
May 23, 1982 Seven Argentine planes are shot down
May 24, 1982 HMS Antelope sunk
May 25, 1982 HMS Coventry and HMS Atlantic Conveyor sink
May 28, 1982 Battle of Goose Green
June 11, 1982 Battle of Port Stanley begins
June 14, 1982 Argentine surrender at Port Stanley
Scargill vs. Thatcher: 1984 Coal Miners’ Strike

“We had to fight the enemy without in the Falklands. We always have to be aware of the enemy within, which is much more difficult to fight and more dangerous to liberty.” – Margaret Thatcher

“We face not an employer but a government aided and abetted by the judiciary, the police and you people in the media” - Arthur Scargill, NUM President

Margaret Thatcher had learned from her Conservative predecessor, Edward Heath the danger that labor unions could pose to a Prime Minister. Heath lost re-election shortly after the miners moved to strike in 1974. His loss prompted him to ask, “Who governs Britain?” Thatcher wanted to prove that she governed. Part of Thatcher’s dearest-held policies was that she was not going to subsidize mines that were losing money. She also wanted to weaken the power that the unions had used so effectively in 1972 when the Miners strike shut off electricity. The National Union of Mineworkers (NUM) was a formidable organization. Decisions about mining were not entirely in the hands of the government-run Coal Board or NUM. Thatcher’s first encounter with NUM was in 1981 when she was advised by Conservative leaders to back down. By 1984, Thatcher and the Tory government had quietly prepared for a potential miners’ strike. The government had stockpiled coal and made accommodations for coal-powered electrical plants to burn oil if necessary so as not to disrupt distribution.

Arthur Scargill, the leader of NUM started in the mines at age fifteen. He joined the Communist party in his youth, but left it in the 1950’s. However, Communist ideals about the role of the worker would influence his time as president of NUM. He made his name in the union with the success of his “flying pickets” at the Saltley coke depot in Birmingham during the 1972 strike. He became president of NUM in 1983. He was immensely popular with the miners who had songs and chants to accompany his name. When the Cortonwood colliery began striking in 1984 to protest the proposed closure, Scargill made the fateful decision not to call for a union-wide vote on the decision strike but encouraged local unions to strike in solidarity. As a result, not all regional mines halted production. This meant coal was available and further harmed the cause of the strikers. His failure to get a union-wide mandate led to criticism in the press and few other labor unions joined in supporting the strike.

The 1984 Miners strike was a battle of opposing ideals. Working underground in the collieries required dependency on the other miners. This spirit of hard work and camaraderie were being challenged by Thatcher’s economic ideals. Her desire to close uneconomic mines, as part of a plan to halt the economic decline of Britain, was an affront to the miners’ way of life and an end to their means of subsistence. She was seen as putting economic values ahead of human ones. During the course of the yearlong strike, the financial hardship on miners and their families was severe. There are many accounts of families living without heat or water and subsisting on potatoes. Thatcher never publicly expressed sympathy for the miners and their families or acknowledged the work they did. The length and severity of the strike meant that certain regions would necessarily become volatile. Police and strikers clashed. Two miners were prosecuted and imprisoned for murder when the brick they dropped on a taxi carrying Scab miners to work hit the driver and killed him. It was a watershed moment for many in the country. Those who supported the strike were vehemently opposed to Thatcher’s implacability. To those who supported Tory measures, the miners’ strike was viewed as excessive and without mandate. The Labour Party, by its close association with the unions, lost public support in the wake of the strike. After a very close NUM vote, the union workers who had suffered for a year were told they were returning to work without gaining any concessions from the government.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>January 9, 1972</td>
<td>Miners strike against the government</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 9, 1972</td>
<td>Heath imposes three-day week</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 16, 1972</td>
<td>Miners’ strike turns off the lights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 18, 1972</td>
<td>Wilberforce report recommends pay raise for miners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 25, 1972</td>
<td>Miners call off coal strike</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>September 26, 1972</td>
<td>Heath proposes “social contract” to unions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>November 12, 1973</td>
<td>State of emergency as miners ban overtime</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 4, 1974</td>
<td>81% of miners vote to strike</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 7, 1974</td>
<td>Edward Heath calls an election</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 28, 1974</td>
<td>Election results in a hung Parliament</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 6, 1974</td>
<td>Wilson leads minority government</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 2, 1977</td>
<td>Miners demand £135 for four-day week</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>November 13, 1979</td>
<td>Miners reject 20% pay raise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 10, 1981</td>
<td>Coal Board announces major pit closures</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 18, 1981</td>
<td>Thatcher gives in to miners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>February 21, 1981</td>
<td>Miners vote in favor of 9.3% rise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 16, 1982</td>
<td>Miners back health workers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 28, 1983</td>
<td>Thatcher named Ian McGregor as Coal Board head</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 5, 1984</td>
<td>Cortonwood colliery strikes over closure plans</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 6, 1984</td>
<td>McGregor announces plan to close 20 pits or 20,000 jobs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 12, 1984</td>
<td>Miners strike over threatened pit closures</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 15, 1984</td>
<td>Flying picket dies outside Ollerton colliery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 7, 1984</td>
<td>London demonstration supports miners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 9, 1984</td>
<td>Dozens arrested in picket line violence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 12, 1984</td>
<td>Scargill vetoes national ballot on strike</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 29, 1984</td>
<td>Miners and police clash at Orgreave mine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>September 6, 1984</td>
<td>Miners and police clash at Kellingly mine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>September 21, 1984</td>
<td>Maltby picket sparks violence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>September 28, 1984</td>
<td>Pit dispute is deemed ‘illegal’ by judge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>November 30, 1984</td>
<td>Two miners charges with murdering taxi driver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>December 14, 1984</td>
<td>Court fines Scargill for obstruction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 3, 1985</td>
<td>Miners call off yearlong strike</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 16, 1985</td>
<td>Miners jailed for pit-strike murder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>October 13, 1990</td>
<td>Thousands of miners lose their jobs</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Discussion Questions:

On the Play:

Pravda is a satire, a work that uses humor to look critically at human foibles or the weakness of human institutions. What or who is being critiqued in the play?

Is humor an effective medium to deliver social commentary? Why or why not?

Does the audience feel sympathy for any of the characters in the play? Why or why not?

What is the role of journalism in society?

Has the role of journalism changed over time?

What are a journalist’s obligations to his or her readers?

David Hare and Howard Brenton have strong political opinions. What is the role of theater in addressing current or historic events?

How does theater’s role in addressing these events differ from the role of journalism in covering the same events?

Pravda grew out of the concerns and critiques of two playwrights in Britain in the 1980s, yet there are no specific references in the play to any historic events in Britain at that time. How is this an asset or a detriment to the play?

On the Production:

The stage is designed so that both halves of the audience face each other and the action occurs in between.

How does this design effect how you experienced the show?

Could you see responses from the audience opposite you?

Did you notice the presence or absence of sound in a particular scene? How did the sound affect the scene?

The script calls for many of the actors to portray multiple roles throughout the play. Does that effect how you view the characters in any given scene?
Projects for Students:

Have students read a newspaper article and cover the adjectives in the article. Have them switch with another student and fill in new adjectives. Then have them discuss how changing the description changes the content of the story.

Have students find articles on the same subject in different newspapers. Have them compare the articles and discuss whether various newspapers have alternate takes on a news story.

Bibliography

Related Websites

Media

Newspapers
http://www.bl.uk/collections/national.html (links to on-line editions of London newspapers)
http://www.newspaper-industry.org/history.html
http://www.writersservices.com/wps/p_glossary_%20printing.htm http://www.newscorp.com/operations/newspapers.html (News Corp. Papers)
http://www.hearstcastle.org/history/william_r_hearst.asp

Rupert Murdoch
http://www.economist.com/business/displayStory.cfm?story_id=3387230
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/uk/2162658.stm
http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/dates/stories/january/2/newsid_2492000/2492157.stm

Fleet Street
http://www.ketupa.net/fleetstreet.htm
http://www.ketupa.net/fleetstreet2.htm

Pravda (the Soviet newspaper)
http://english.pravda.ru/http://www.nationmaster.com/encyclopedia/Pravda http://www.cnn.com/SPECIALS/cold.war/kbank/1stdraft.html
http://www.cnn.com/SPECIALS/cold.war/guides/about.site/
http://www.cyberussr.com/rus/pravda-istina-e.html

David Hare
http://www.doollee.com/PlaywrightsH/HareDavid.htm#15569
http://www.pbs.org/viadolorosa/davidhare.html http://www.salon.com/people/bc/1999/12/07/hare/http://www.imagi-nation.com/moonstruck/clsc52.html
http://www.contemporarywriters.com/authors/?p=auth253&state=#criticalperspective
http://www.hrc.utexas.edu/research/fa/hare.bio.html

Howard Brenton
http://fb14.uni-mainz.de/projects/cde/bibl/brenton.htm
http://www.cla.sc.edu/engl/LitCheck/Brenton.htm
http://www.millenniumlibrary.co.uk/millib/reference/notes.php?entry=Howard+Brenton &fromdb=2

Maps
http://www.ukguide.org/london/londonmap.html
http://www.picturesofengland.com/mapofengland/regions.html

1980’s England
http://www.bbc.co.uk/history/timelines/britain/post_thatcher.shtml (Thatcherism)
http://www.bbc.co.uk/history/timelines/britain/post_falklands.shtml (Falkland Islands)
http://www.thenortheast.fsnet.co.uk/page94.htm

1984 Miners’ Strike
http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/witness/march/12/newsid_2809000/2809239.stm
http://www.workersliberty.org/node/view/3472?PHPSESSID=145ca92a35bb64ebd8ad805cb807b1c
http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/witness/march/12/newsid_3501000/3501494.stm

Margaret Thatcher
http://www.time.com/time/time100/leaders/profile/thatcher.html
http://www.margaretthatcher.net/
http://www.margaretthatcher.org/default.htm
http://www.quotationspage.com/quotes/Margaret_Thatcher/

Parliament
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Parliament_of_the_United_Kingdom
http://www.parliament.the-stationery-office.co.uk/pa/ld/ldcomp/compso.htm http://www.parliament.uk/works/works.cfm
http://www.freefoto.com/preview.jsp?id=31-07-5 (photo)

Conservative (Tory) Party
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tory

Labour Party
http://www.labour.org.uk/

Church of England
http://www.cofe.anglican.org/http://www.archbishopofcanterbury.org/about/bio.html
http://www.bishopthorpepalace.co.uk/